The Power of Togetherness in Isolation

There is no industry that has gone untouched by COVID-19. The long-term effects, both physically and economically, are unknown. A recurring message of “togetherness” has emerged as a common platitude across all spectrums of media with limited impact on our collective psyche. The fact of the matter is, there is a palpable sense of unease regarding where we will all be in the next few months. Instead of a mere cliché, where does “togetherness” really work, and how can we maximize the concept in a time of, well, isolation?

The power of togetherness has always been a central theme of what we are all about at Trinity/HPSI. Operating a large national purchasing group means combining the purchasing power of thousands of organizations across every state so that everyone in the group gets better pricing. It’s a simple concept; groups pay less. Since 2005, we have served thousands of organizations, mainly consisting of camps, conference centers, rescue missions, community centers, religious organizations and similar entities, by combining purchasing power and saving our members millions every year.

At Trinity/HPSI, we are actively helping members of our national purchasing group mitigate the effects of COVID-19 through our purchasing agreements with a large network of major national vendors. Our agreements offer pricing discounts on food, propane, janitorial supplies, office supplies, maintenance supplies, pool supplies, and so much more. With free participation in our group and no obligations, our members can enjoy great prices where it makes sense for them without any added expenses of yearly fees or dues. With revenues being drastically reduced, most of our members are currently hunkered down and tentatively looking towards the summer. The power of togetherness in purchasing can really make a difference, even as we all must navigate things differently for the organizations we run and ultimately the people we serve.
